Biographical/Historical note

Lewis Gibson Longsworth, researcher in physical chemistry at The Rockefeller University from 1930 until his retirement in 1970 with researches and publications on the electrochemistry of salt and protein solutions with applications in biology and medicine. His major interest has been in the determination of mobilities, first of small ions, then of macromolecules such as protein and finally of uncharged particles that do not respond to an electric field.

Scope and Contents note

Professional correspondence, collected reprints, slides, and other special formats (transparencies, prints, illustrations, and negatives).

Boxes 1 and 2 consist of biographical material, bibliography and collected reprints. Primarily a collection of professional correspondence (1935-1969). Correspondence consists of exchanges of scientific information, discussions of problems and suggested approaches for design and use of apparatus; discussion of experimental results and calculations. Includes frequent examples of detailed analyses and calculations to assist in the experimental work, calculation or interpretation of diffusion and electrophoretic work done in other laboratories or other investigators. Some correspondence deals with arrangements for conferences.

Box 3 contains slides. Boxes 4-17 contain slides and other special formats (transparencies, prints, illustrations, and negatives).
