American Art Conservation Initiative Files, 2006-2014

Biographical / Historical

The American Art Conservation Initiative was a one-year program which funded the conservation of art in United States museums. These grants covered the cost of ongoing conservation treatments, such as exhibition preparation, stabilization, and framing. Eligible media included paintings, sculptures, drawings, prints, decorative arts, textiles, and photography.

Luce Fund for Southeast Asian Studies, 1982-2005

Biographical / Historical

The Luce Fund for Southeast Asian Studies was designed to enhance the quality of Southeast Asian studies at both the graduate and the undergraduate levels at American Universities. It was a competitive grant program for universities that have made significant commitments to the field of Southeast Asian studies. Grants were awarded for faculty development, library development, student fellowships, public education, and other programs that were considered beneficial to the growth of the field.

Scope and Contents

The Luce Fund for Southeast Asian Studies series contains general information about the initiative including program guidelines, grants, and surveys. This series also includes information about each of the nine institutions that were invited to participate in the program: Cornell University, Northern Illinois University, Northwest Regional Consortium for Southeast Asian Studies (Universities of Oregon and Washington), Ohio University, University of California (Berkeley), University of Hawaii, University of Michigan, University of Wisconsin (Madison), and Yale University.

Luce Fund for Chinese Scholars, 1980-2005

Biographical / Historical

The Luce Fund for Chinese Scholars was created to enhance the study of China in major American academic centers and encourage interaction between Chinese and American scholars. Each participating university was eligible to receive support for one scholar-in-residence from China for each academic year. The grants awarded were not competitive in nature, but were based on nominations from the universities.

Arrangement

General program information can be found at the beginning of the series. Individual grant files can be found within university-specific sub-series.
