Biographical / Historical

Shepard Forman held multiple positions in the Ford Foundation related to international issues and founded the Center on International Cooperation at New York University. Forman received his Ph.D. in Anthropology from Columbia in 1966 with previous training in history, Brazilian studies, and Spanish language and literature. He completed post-doctoral work in development economics at the Institute for Development Studies at Sussex, England and field research in Northeast Brazil and Timor-Leste.

Between 1966 and 1969, he held professorships in anthropology at Indiana University, the University of Chicago, and the University of Michigan. In 1977, Forman took a leave of absence from the University of Michigan to work as a program officer for the Ford Foundation in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. In this position, he was involved in community economic and rural development while also coordinating a grantmaking program in economics and the social sciences to universities and research institutes.

In 1981, Forman stepped into the role of Director of the Human Rights and Governance programs at the Ford Foundation. He was involved in public policy initiatives and assisted civil rights and international human rights organizations. Forman became Director of International Affairs programs at the Ford Foundation in 1991. As Director, he created a grantmaking program of research, policy analysis and public education on post-Cold War international relations. He held primary responsibility for Foundation programs in Russia and Eastern Europe and supervised 20 program and support staff in the fields of peacekeeping and disarmament, international law, international economics and development, and U.S. foreign policy. Forman left the Foundation in 1996 to found and direct the Center on International Cooperation (CIC) at New York University. The CIC's primary mission is to strengthen cooperative approaches among national governments, international organizations, and the wider policy community to advance peace, justice, and inclusion. Forman retired from the CIC in 2008. Forman served as president of the Life After Ford Foundation (LAFF) Society from 2008 until 2019.
