Biographical / Historical

Reverend Everett Carleton Parker established the United Church of Christ Office of Communications in 1954 as a way to change the racial disparity and presentation of social justice issues for black Americans on the nation's local television screens. Through Parker's work, the church was named as a petitioner in the TV license renewal hearing for WLBT in Jackson, Mississippi. In 1969, WLBT was the first TV station to lose its right to broadcast for adhering to pro-segregationist programming. The Ford Foundation made the first two-year grant (Grant #06800203) to the United Church of Christ Office of Communication to "redress racial imbalance in service and programming in broadcasting in 12 southern cities" on January 31, 1968. The Foundation provided $990,000 to the UCC over the next ten years. The Foundation has provided subsequent grants to the church to support conferences and leadership summits in the 1990s and 2000s.
