Institutional History

Collaboratives for Humanities and Arts Teaching (CHART) was initiated in 1983 by the Rockefeller Foundation, although it did not formally adopt the name CHART until 1987. CHART began in response to the 1980 Rockefeller Foundation report "The Humanities in American Life," which warned of a crisis in American humanities education, and as a way to combat the "back to basics" pedagogy that predominated at the time and left students drilling and memorizing rather than learning and exploring. While they started with the goal of improving humanities education, CHART leaders soon realized that this goal was almost impossible to achieve without larger school reform, so they turned much of their attention to school restructuring and teacher-led curricular reform. This change was reflected in the movement of CHART out of the Rockefeller Foundation's arts and humanities division and into their relatively new school reform program in 1990. CHART's primary function was as a source of funding and an organizational umbrella for a variety of localized reform and education projects. The list below gives the name of each project, the year CHART began supporting it, and the year it ceased to be a CHART project. Common characteristics of all the CHART sites included localized, teacher-driven curricula, a focus on average students in urban or rural environments, and the expansion of multicultural and international education. Collaborations with other local institutions, such as museums, universities, and businesses, also formed a major element of many CHART projects. Collaboration between projects and among educators across the country was an essential element as well, as evidenced by the large number of conferences and institutes that CHART leaders attended or helped to run, including frequent meetings between all of the CHART site directors. The Rockefeller Foundation gave its tenth and final grant to CHART in 1993, and CHART formally ceased to exist as an entity in early 1994. The individual CHART project sites generally continued to operate after this time, and some connection between them may have been maintained, but this collection contains very little information pertaining to the formal end of CHART and the nature and specifics of the transfer of responsibility to individual sites.

Scope and Contents

This collection contains materials related to the group Collaboratives for Humanities and Arts Teaching (CHART), a project of the Rockefeller Foundation that operated from 1983-1994. While a few documents come from as early as 1983 or as late as 1994, the bulk of the materials date between 1987 and 1993. Series 1 includes substantial correspondence from CHART director Judith Renyi to the Rockefeller Foundation, CHART site directors, and many others, as well as some additional planning materials. Major Rockefeller Foundation correspondents include Alberta Arthurs and Hugh B. Price. Series 2 contains details about potential CHART sites, the CHARTnet telecommunications network between teachers, the Africa in the U.S. Classroom project, and other reports on national education issues. This series also contains considerable information about the creation and publication of the CHART book, Fire in the Eyes of Youth, a copy of which text is in the public relations materials in box 21. Series 3 includes materials such as agendas, handouts, and transcripts from various conferences which CHART members either attended or helped to organize. Finally, series 4 houses many of CHART's public relations materials, including newspaper clippings and other media as well as formal information kits. Substantial content throughout the collection also relates to individual projects sponsored by CHART, such as Humanitas and PATHS. Overall, major topics covered include the humanities, the arts, multicultural and international education, school reform and restructuring, and the funding for such reforms.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Arrangement

The CHART records are arranged into the following four series: 1.Administration 2.Projects 3.Conferences and Institutes 4.Public Relations

The original arrangement of the documents was largely retained, except in cases where titles were clearly inaccurate or items clearly misfiled. The original reverse chronological order was retained at the item level (and documents were occasionally rearranged to maintain this order), but alphabetical-chronological order was imposed at the folder level.

Four sheets of photographs and one cassette tape had to be removed from the main collection for preservation. The photographs are housed in oversize box 22, while the cassette tape has been removed to Special Formats.
