Biographical / Historical

Sidney Jones is a policy analyst with expertise on security and terrorism in Indonesia and Southeast Asia. From 1977 to 1984, Jones worked at the Ford Foundation. She joined the Foundation as an Assistant to the Representative in the Asia and the Pacific, Indonesia Program. She then became a Program Officer, and after a change in the Foundation's program structure, she was moved into the Developing Country Programs where she stayed until she left the Foundation in 1984.

Jones' post-Ford Foundation career has included positions in nonprofits in London, New York City, and Jakarta. She worked at Amnesty International in London as an Indonesia-Philippines-Pacific researcher, Human Rights Watch in New York City as Asia director, and the International Crisis Group in Jakarta as Southeast Asia project director and then senior advisor for the Asia program. After leaving the International Crisis Group, Jones became Director for the Institute for Policy Analysis of Conflict which is also based in Jakarta.

Jones earned a B.A. and M.A. from the University of Pennsylvania and received an honorary doctorate from The New School.
