Biographical/Historical note

The Rockefeller Foundation was established by act of the New York State Legislature approved by the Governor on May 14, 1913, "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." Between 1913 and 1928 the China Medical Board, the International Health Board, and the Division of Medical Education functioned as divisions of the Foundation, concentrating on the administration of programs in public health and medical education. A Division of Studies was created in 1923 to handle projects outside the medical field. These early years were experimental as the new foundation studied the methods of philanthropy and explored its relationships with other Rockefeller boards.

Although the Rockefeller Foundation is the largest and best known philanthropy founded by the Rockefeller family, it was neither the first nor the last to be established. The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research (1901), the General Education Board (1902), the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission for the Eradication of Hookworm Disease (1909), and the Bureau of Social Hygiene (1911) all existed earlier. When the Foundation was created, the Sanitary Commission was disbanded. After the establishment of the Foundation, the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial (1918) and the International Education Board (1923) were created.

The Rockefeller boards and their programs were reconsidered and reorganized in 1927-1928 in order to avoid overlapping programs. The International Health Board of the Foundation was disbanded and an International Health Division was organized. The China Medical Board, Inc., was established as a separately incorporated institution, and the China Medical Board of the Foundation ceased to exist. The Division of Studies was dropped and the Division of Medical Education was phased out. The Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial was combined with the Foundation and the Spelman Fund of New York was chartered to continue activities of the LSRM that were not absorbed by the Foundation. The International Education Board was disbanded.

As a result of this reorganization, the Foundation adopted a program which included public health work (administered by the IHD), the advancement of knowledge in the medical and natural sciences (in part taken over from the IEB), the social sciences (formerly the field of the LSRM), and the humanities and arts (shared with the GEB). The Rockefeller Institute and the Bureau of Social Hygiene were not affected by the reorganization. The program adopted by the Foundation at this time remained basically the same for the next twenty years.

As its files accumulated, the Foundation maintained a card index recording the names of institutional and individual grantees and correspondents. A microfilm copy of this index is available at the Archive Center.

Arrangement note

The project files are arranged in series according to country. Each state within the United States and every country or geographical area was assigned a three-digit number by RF staff. In addition, the records are further arranged into subseries, designated by letters signifying program areas, for example, "A" indicates a grant in the Medical Sciences program area, and "C" Nursing. Material is organized within these letter/program subdivisions alphabetically by grant title. A grant title usually consists of a heading that includes the name of the institution or individual that received the grant. Thus each grant, or project, is filed individually in one or more folders.

Scope and Contents

The Rockefeller Foundation files for the Philippines, dating from the late 1950s to the mid-1980s, document the RF's continued involvement in the Philippines, with its support for medicine, agriculture, and the broader development of the University of the Philippines (UP). The materials also reflect the central position of the Philippines in the RF's Asian program.

Central in location, relatively stable, with natural resources and infrastructure, historical ties to the U. S., and a common English language, the Philippines was a good base for the RF's newer international initiatives in Asia. The RF saw the UP as a promising base for regional training and research in the fields of agriculture and economics. Alongside its traditional support, the RF partnered with the Ford Foundation in the establishment in the Philippines of the International Rice Research Institute (IRRI). It was also a major backer in a consortium of funding agencies behind the Council for Asian Manpower Studies (CAMS). Along with the files on university development, rural health, and family planning, the records of these two organizations make up most of the Philippines series.

Philippines - Natural Sciences and Agriculture, 1950-1992

Scope and Contents note

The International Rice Research Institute (IRRI) had a certain elegance. Founded in 1960 as a joint project of the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations, the Institute aimed to tackle the "food production problem" in Asia, with the goal of "closing the gap between the demand for rice and available supplies." The Ford Foundation funded the buildings and equipment, while the RF assumed responsibility for the scientific direction and management. The University of the Philippines (UP) gave IRRI a long-term lease on its site adjoining the College of Agriculture at Los Banos.

IRRI approached its mission with urgency and exuberance. In December 1963, Sterling Wortman entitled his seminar presentation, "Rice Research: A Race against Time." Having defined the problem as one of inadequate yields, owing primarily to poor agricultural practices and unimproved varieties, the researchers and staff of IRRI set out to revolutionize rice production in Asia. Bolstered by its crop improvement programs in Mexico and India, the RF brought its science and experience to bear on rice in Asia.

Construction began in November 1960, and administration, dormitory, library and research buildings were completed for dedication ceremonies in February 1962. From the spring of 1961, IRRI had begun to collect and catalogue a "world rice collection" of seeds and genetic material. It assembled a library of rice publications and prepared an international bibliography on rice. By early 1962, irrigated fields awaited experimental planting, and research and training programs soon started up in conjunction with the College of Agriculture.

In the early years, especially, the RF recruited many of its own agricultural staff veterans to fill research positions at IRRI. The goal, however, was to make IRRI an Asian research institute. IRRI sought a representative distribution of Asian nations on its governing board, and it hoped, through fellowships and the training and research opportunities it afforded, to supply the skilled rice specialists needed to continue the mission both at IRRI and back in their home countries.

IRRI's "elegance" seemed to some also a liability. In making IRRI a world-class facility, there was concern that the "luxury" of IRRI's laboratories and residences would engender resentment from the neighboring College of Agriculture. But its sponsors meant IRRI to be a model and a beacon, the quality of its facilities reflecting the nobility of its aspirations and the seriousness of its purpose.

A heady enthusiasm characterized the early reports of IRRI's research. Plant breeders worked to develop rice varieties that were "short, stiff-strawed, early maturing, disease-resistant, and non-sensitive to time of day." These varieties would both produce more grain and be less likely to lodge or buckle, reducing grain losses in the field. Early maturation meant that one could harvest two crops a year. Agronomists, chemists, engineers - and communication specialists - worked alongside the breeders, testing fertilizers, pesticides, and nutritional components, designing multiple-cropping schemes, and devising floating tractors and electric rat fences.

In late 1966, IRRI named its first major rice variety, IR 8, soon known as "Miracle Rice." IRRI already drew a steady stream of visitors and had inspired several magazine articles, but Miracle Rice was a sensation. President Marcos sent the Shah of Iran a packet of IR 8 seeds as his coronation gift and at home launched his own government-sponsored production campaign. IRRI distributed seeds (and "Do-It-Yourself-Rice Kits") to governments and agricultural stations throughout "free" Asia. There was some speculation that Miracle Rice would win the Cold War.

Other varieties followed, and the impact on rice production was dramatic. Whereas top yields in 1962 had been around 4.5 tons/hectare, in 1968 yields regularly measured seven to ten tons/hectare. In late 1967 it seemed that the Republic of the Philippines was on its way to rice self-sufficiency.

The production figures did not translate so smoothly from experimental plot to farmers' fields, however. High yields came as part of a "complete package" of improved practices, requiring not just new varieties, but large amounts of fertilizer, proper planting and irrigation, and disease and pest control. Adopted piecemeal, Miracle Rice lost some of its wonder. The package did not always suit local conditions. IRRI developed it varieties in irrigated fields, but most Filipino rice grew not in paddies, but in rain-fed or upland fields. To purchase fertilizer, the small farmer needed access to credit. Electric fences shorted out in irrigated fields. Some found the new rice unpalatable. Agricultural practices could not be taken singly, but involved issues of labor and local environment. Periodic allegations that IRRI was importing diseased stock or engaged in high-risk research also raised spectral subsistence anxieties.

Increasingly, IRRI realized it needed to "probe in the farmer's world" and study his problems, if it was to understand the lag in rice production. In 1964, IRRI social scientists studied ways to introduce change, and IRRI programs targeted extension workers. The communications office released a film on rice improvement aimed at extension agents and the general public. There was a sense that farmers would eagerly adopt the new technology, if they were properly educated. Extension workers themselves seemed to be an obstacle, so training programs focused on "changing the change agent." The extensive files on Farmer Training document many of IRRI's efforts to match its improvements to the local ground of the small farmer. IRRI also engaged anthropologists, such as Grace Goodell, as interlocutors between the barrios and the laboratory, reverse extension agents who would interpret the farmers to the scientists.

The records in this series span a period of change and political turmoil in the Philippines. The RF's transition in the early 1970s from University Development to Education for Development coincided with and ostensibly shared some goals with Marcos's New Society, even as the RF and IRRI tried to steer an apolitical and international course. The history of rice improvement is also a history of development efforts in Southeast Asia. In addition to correspondence, the IRRI files contain regular retrospective reports and evaluations of its programs and their successes or failures.

Philippines - Social Sciences, 1971-1990

Scope and Contents note

The Council for Asian Manpower Studies (CAMS) was a regional network founded in 1972 with the goal of promoting research and training on problems of population and employment in South and Southeast Asia. Funding for its research programs came from a consortium of donor agencies, including the Rockefeller Foundation, USAID, the World Bank, the Canadian International Development Research Centre, and the Ford Foundation, along with contributions from Asian governments. While most CAMS members had university affiliations, members also included professionals from various government ministries.

CAMS fit the RF's policy goal of aiding researchers and policymakers in developing nations to analyze pressing social problems. Policy-oriented and university-based, CAMS research both addressed problems and trained a new generation in research techniques. With nine Asian countries represented, CAMS programs emphasized interdisciplinary, cross-country, and comparative approaches. Five committees (later, three divisions) organized CAMS research around topics of population and labor force; employment creation and income distribution; education, fertility, and manpower development; technology and employment; and trade and employment. Research findings were shared and discussed through workshops, seminars, and publications.

Funding for research started in 1974. The dean of the School of Economics at the University of the Philippines (UP) was CAMS chairman at the time, and the CAMS office was also located there. Harry T. Oshima, the RF field representative in the Philippines who taught in the School of Economics, was very closely involved with CAMS. Oshima was a prolific correspondent who reflected at length (in the general Administration files, as well as the Series 242 S files on CAMS and the UP) on issues of scholarship, culture, and administration.

What is striking about the CAMS files is the furious production of research projects and studies they seem to represent. If CAMS started in 1972 out of concern over rapid population growth and rising unemployment, the impression one gains from its files is of an enormous quest for information on the society, economy, and development of Southeast Asia. Some CAMS publications may represent valuable sources of data in themselves (on demographics, for example). Overall, the extensive series of discussion papers and publications document both the history of Asian development in the 1970s and 1980s, and its growing significance.

The records in this subseries for CAMS and the UP complement each other and should be consulted together.

American Cultural Heritage, 1936, 1960-1984

Physical Description: 22 box(es)

Scope and Contents note

In late 1970 the officers of the Rockefeller Foundation allocated $300,000 to launch a program of grants to individuals engaged in the study of America's "cultural heritage." The following year, they appropriated an additional $500,000 to support similar initiatives on an institutional level.

Taking shape in a time of political, social, and cultural ferment, the American Cultural Heritage Program broadly aspired to "provide an alternative" to the "cynicism" and "self-doubt" that seemed to characterize Americans' understanding of their nation and their past. The alternative the officers envisioned was no simple-minded recitation of American myths, but rather a careful and creative reexamination of America's heritage "in the light of present problems." Greater self-understanding would lead to greater "awareness among Americans of their historical and cultural interdependence," a necessary first step to surmounting the problems that divided them. Such a critical reappraisal would also be a worthy contribution to the approaching national bicentennial commemoration.

The Cultural Heritage Program sought out promising younger scholars in the humanities and social sciences and particularly valued creative and interdisciplinary approaches. "Intellectual excellence, broad social commitment, and an imaginative approach" were the criteria that would guide institutional grants. With both the individual and institutional grants, the Foundation's goal was to "make an important contribution to the self-understanding of America's populace," and then to help shape the future by disseminating these new views of the past through formal and informal educational programs.

The projects funded vary widely but are notable for the impetus they display to seek out new questions and new ways of answering them. The question of "identities" and the contributions of minorities to the American nation were primary areas of study. Grantees studied transitions in Alaskan Eskimo life, Emancipation Day celebrations, Chinese workers in Oregon, recent immigrant communities, the role of black religion, and the works of black and women writers. The grants favored projects that sought to apply new disciplines and new techniques to the consideration of American culture. Through oral histories and field research, historians and others used the tools of anthropology to understand their own society. Oral history projects documented labor unrest in the Midwest, southern politicians, and American music, among other topics. On an institutional level, American Cultural Heritage grants launched major centers for the study of Atlantic, Southern, and Appalachian history.

Film, television production, and photographic studies make up another segment of these grants. Projects funded include photographic studies of the American farm, of four Texas counties, of grassroots Christianity, and of blacks in America. Films on folk traditions and television productions on the history of a New England mill town and on the social history of technology in America also received support. The University of Iowa received funding for a program to integrate the study of film and American civilization.

While some projects, like the Atlantic Studies Center at Johns Hopkins University, received major funding and some grants went to well-established scholars and institutions, the foundation's concern to cast its grants widely is striking. In assessing a grant to collect a history of the Gros Ventre tribe, for example, the foundation officer noted that while they could look for someone with "fancier credentials," they might also give "direct and substantial encouragement" to this "diligent amateur." The foundation also was concerned, in redressing the historical record, that the story be told by those who had lived it. The focus on oral history reflects this interest, but the concern was really a broader one to empower minorities to interpret their own heritage. Officers carefully considered a scholar's rapport with the community under study and gave extra weight to a shared regional or ethnic background. They favored one proposal, for example, because it presented the "possibility of furthering Southern Studies by people from this region, in this region." Some grants trained individuals in techniques that could then be brought back to the community.

The smallest grant - for $615 - allowed a scholar to complete a study of the black poet and novelist Jean Toomer. As the final grant report noted, people were impressed that "of all the RF's worldwide activities, . . . we could still take time to make such a small grant for such an obscure project."

While the American Cultural Heritage Program was a limited initiative, it is interesting to see the ways it intersected with and helped shape new initiatives in historical study. It encouraged interdisciplinary and particularly anthropological approaches to historical questions, supported the study of folklore, family history, religion, labor history, women's studies, community and regional studies, and embraced the application of new media to the presentation of traditional subjects. That these approaches are commonplace in textbooks today attests in some measure to the program's success. Researchers may also find in these files reflections of present-day concerns with cultural identity, heritage, and meaning.

Fellowships for American Playwrights/Playwrights-in-Residence Program, 1968-1997

Physical Description: 44 box(es)

Scope and Contents note

In 1970, the Rockefeller Foundation launched a program of fellowships for American playwrights, which centered on residencies in selected theaters. The goals of the program were to support playwrights of demonstrated talent at critical middle stages of their careers, and to support innovative regional theaters and younger playwrights throughout the United States. There were two levels of grant awards. The first granted a fellowship to the playwright, who then chose an association with a theater at which to serve a six-week residency. The second level selected ten regional theaters to receive grants that allowed them to name a local playwright to a similar six-week residency. In both cases, the theaters received funds to help defray production costs associated with the residency.

There were a number of unusual aspects to the playwright-in-residence program. For one, playwrights could not apply for these fellowships. The Foundation solicited nominations from theaters and directors from around the country, and then selected eight playwrights from among the nominees. For another, apart from the six-week residency, the money arrived with no strings attached. There was no requirement that something be written or something produced. The Rockefeller Foundation was investing in the future; as one officer explained, it was not looking to get something for its money.

Arriving unbidden, the fellowships often had a certain providential aspect. Impecunious playwrights saw these grants as a gift of time; the money bought them time to write. As importantly, the grants conferred an official recognition and validation that was particularly helpful to artists accustomed to laboring alone. For playwrights often working at the edge of the avant-garde, the grants brought a vote of confidence and much needed encouragement.

The residencies, which usually took the form of staged readings and developmental workshops, allowed the playwrights to try out their work, to hear how lines sounded, to see what worked and what needed rethinking. The grants gave the playwrights the tools of funding, apparatus, and supportive environment needed to translate their solitary product into a public work of theater. And the association with the playwright enriched theater as a whole.

This series contains the records of the playwrights-in-residence program, and includes grants made to close to 200 playwrights and theaters. In addition to routine grant correspondence, the series notably contains extensive program and policy files, numerous scripts, promotional materials and reviews, and some descriptive grant reports. At its conclusion in 1989, the Fellowships for American Playwrights program had the distinction of being the longest continuously operating program of the Arts and Humanities Division.
