Scope and Contents

These papers, which consist of eleven boxes of correspondence, inter-office memoranda, reports, and a draft of the Crossland publication The Changing American College, are primarily concerned with the application process of the Venture Fund Program, the American Undergraduate Education survey, and, to a lesser extent, with the issues facing educators on the college level in the 1970's.

The papers reflect Crossland's involvement during the years 1973-74 with the Foundation-sponsored Venture Fund Program. Initiated in 1970, the Venture Fund Program sought to respond to the student unrest of the late 1960's, by helping to strengthen, and to encourage innovation in, undergraduate education in America.

The files consist of completed questionnaires, related correspondence, and accounts of site visits by FF staff to institutions applying for Venture Fund grants.

The October 1974 American Undergraduate Education survey, a follow-up to the Venture Fund Program, solicited responses from eighty-nine educators who were asked to identify what they thought were the major issues and problems facing America's colleges and universities at that time.

The American Undergraduate Education survey material consists of completed questionnaires, related correspondence, and mini-profiles of the responding institutions.

The papers contain a draft of Crossland's book, The Changing American College, in which he discussed the state of American higher education based upon conclusions drawn from the Venture Fund Program and the American Undergraduate Education survey.

One box of material relates to educational planning for the 1980's. This correspondence, which Crossland maintained with top college and university officials in thirteen states, deals mainly with the problem of decreasing student enrollment and its affect on state university systems.

Crossland maintained an array of subject files, all related to FF educational concerns: fellowship programs for minority students, Higher Education and Research planning and budget material, and material on the issues facing the financing of American higher education. There are also the transcripts of seven speeches which Crossland made to various professional organizations and meetings.

Finally, there is the correspondence he maintained with FF colleagues, grantees, and other educational organizations; and Crossland's notes to the "File."
