Biographical/Historical note

Berent Friele (1895-1985) was the son of the co-owner of Friele & Sons of Bergen, Norway, which was one of the leading coffee trading companies at that time. After finishing school in 1912, Friele went to Hamburg, Germany, to work in for another coffee company. During the World War I, Friele moved to Brazil and continued working for the German coffee company, eventually forming his own company in Santos. While working in Brazil, Friele developed his expertise in the cultivation of coffee and further developed his knowledge of the international coffee trade. In 1918 Friele came into contact with The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company (A&P), which contracted him to perform coffee purchases for the corporation; Friele would later form the American Coffee Corporation (ACC) as a subsidiary company of A&P in 1919. In 1920 Friele married Jenny Muller-Camps (1897-1985) in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. By 1929 Friele had moved up within the ranks to become president of A&P.

Berent Friele was instrumental in strengthening ties between the United States and Latin America, particularly Brazil. In 1934 he was named president of the American Brazilian Association and used his intimate knowledge of Latin America to advise U.S. policymakers on outreach with Latin American countries. In 1940 he served under Nelson A. Rockefeller in the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs (OCIAA), marking the beginning of a lifelong collaboration. The primary mission of the OCIAA was to minimize German influence in Latin America while strengthening U.S. ties with the region, in which both Berent Friele and Nelson Rockefeller played major roles. When Nelson Rockefeller was elected governor of New York in 1958, he appointed Friele his adviser on international relations, a position he retained when during Rockefeller's tenure as Vice President of the United States.
