Biographical / Historical

William P. Gormbley, Jr. began his career at the Ford Foundation as a program associate within the Ford Foundation's Economic Development and Administration program in 1962. By 1964, he was the associate director of the Economic Development and Administration. In 1965, after some restructuring at the Foundation, Gormbley served assistant to the vice president of the Division of Administration program. In 1970, he was the officer in charge of the Manpower Services program (which became Personnel Services and later the Office of Personnel and Administrative Services) within the Administration Division. Gormbley left the Foundation in 1982.
