Biographical / Historical

John D. Gregory, associate professor, works on the biochemistry of connective tissues. Connective tissues make up a significant part of the body's substance and provide the body with essential support structures. In his early research, Dr. Gregory developed new techniques for extracting proteoglycans from cartilage tissue and for determining their chemical composition. Proteoglycans play an important role in the cornea and the skin, and Dr. Gregory has worked on characterizing their chemical compositions in both organs to help explain degenerative changes.

In 1971, Dr. Gregory became the President of the Rockefeller University's Chapter of the Society of the Sigma Xi and in 1976 became the President of The Society for Complex Carbohydrates.
