Biographical/Historical note

John Markle was born in Hazelton, Pennsylvania, in 1858. He graduated from Lafayette College in 1880 with a degree in mining engineering and soon took charge of the firm his father had founded, G. B. Markle and Company, which operated the Jeddo mine. Markle was a successful businessman who became known nationally as the builder of the Jeddo drainage tunnel, which reclaimed Pennsylvania mines inundated by floods in 1886. In April 1884, Markle married Mary Estelle Robinson (1863-1927). The couple moved from Hazelton, Pennsylvania, to New York City in 1902. They had no children. In 1926, John Markle retired from business, and the following year he established the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation with an initial endowment of $3 million. Eventually the total endowment from John Markle reached $15 million. John Markle served as president and treasurer of the Foundation until his death in July 1933. The Foundation was chartered "to promote the advancement and diffusion of knowledge among the people of the United States and to promote the general good of mankind." This charter was sufficiently broad to permit supporting virtually any cause and allowed the directors to spend principal as well as income, which the Foundation did in its early years. (The founder rectified the difference.) Grants, averaging a total of $400,000 annually, went primarily to charities which the Markle family had previously supported. In addition, the Markle Foundation financially supported individuals, including relatives and needy strangers who came to John Markle's attention and in whom he took a personal interest. After John Markle's death, the Foundation trustees sought direction from Frederick Keppel, president of the Carnegie Corporation of New York. Following his advice, the Foundation changed from a private organization to a focused public foundation. There were no new individual beneficiaries after 1934, and the trustees began to formulate a plan of action. From 1936 to 1945, the Markle Foundation primarily supported medical research: 627 grants were made to 336 projects, and 1,400 scientific papers were published regarding work supported wholly or in part by the Foundation. In 1946 John Russell, formerly with the Carnegie Corporation of New York, became the executive director of the Foundation. After making an assessment of the Foundation's work, Russell and the Foundation embarked on an ambitious program - the Markle Scholar Program, which became the principal program of the Markle Foundation from 1947 to 1969. Approximately 25 Markle Scholars were chosen each year. They received five years of financial assistance so that they might continue in academic medicine or research rather than enter more lucrative private practices. A total of 506 Markle Scholars were chosen from 90 medical schools in the United States and Canada. In 1969 John Russell retired, and Lloyd Morrisett, also formerly with the Carnegie Corporation of New York, came to the Foundation. In the last months of Russell's tenure, it had been determined that the Markle Scholar program had run its course, and after an evaluation, the Foundation embarked on an ambitious program in the field of mass communications. Beginning in 1969, the Markle Foundation's program aimed to strengthen the performance of the media and to understand the potential of communications technology. Mass communications and information technology had not been a traditional focus of philanthropy, and the grants reflect challenge and innovation. Disbursements averaged $2 million annually.

Scope and Contents note

Includes grant files, administrative files, correspondence, reports, minutes, financial material, annual reports and a small selection of personal materials. The collection is not comprehensive. Due to routine file purges, this collection includes only the records of the final personal beneficiaries, Markle Scholars, and the communications program, along with assorted administrative files. Documentation of other grants exist only in the minutes, progress reports, and collected reprints.

When John Markle moved the base of his business operations from Hazelton, Pennsylvania to New York City in 1902, he periodically returned to Hazelton and destroyed his records. Records remaining in Pennsylvania at the time of his death in 1933 were shipped to his executors in New York City. The executors (and the Foundation) retained only those records directly affecting the finances of Markle's estate.

Processing Information note

Processing of Accession 1 was completed by Chris Graetzel, Project Archivist, on December 21, 1991. Further processing and finding aid creation was completed in February 1993 by Emily J. Oakhill.

Processing of Accession 2 was completed by Candace P. Shuluk and Kathleen Brennan in January 1997.

Conditions Governing Use

RAC users must abide by all applicable provisions of United States copyright law. Reproduction/duplication of archival items is routinely provided in accordance with "fair use." If the RAC does not hold copyright for an archival collection, or items within a collection, it is the user's responsibility to contact the copyright holder, or make a fair effort to do so, prior to publication.

Conditions Governing Access

Open for research. Brittle or damaged items are available at the discretion of RAC. Researchers interested in accessing digital media (floppy disks, CDs, DVDs, etc.) or audiovisual material (audio cassettes, VHS, etc.) in this collection must use an access surrogate. The original items may not be accessed because of preservation concerns. To request an access surrogate be made, or if you are unsure if there is an access surrogate, please contact an archivist.

Immediate Source of Acquisition note

The John and Mary R. Markle Foundation gave its records to the Rockefeller Archive Center in two accessions: one in 1993, and another in 1997.

Scholar Files, 1960-1969

Arrangement note

Scholar files are arranged alphabetically by institution. If the scholar changed institutions during his time as a Markle Scholar, the material was filed by the new institution.

Scope and Contents note

Scholar file correspondence is more personal and administrative than scientific in nature.

Communications, 1969-1984

Physical Description: 30 Cubic Feet 68 boxes

Scope and Contents note

Important topics within Series 3 include cable television, children's television, innovative uses for television, mass media, telecommunications policy, television criticism, and television audiences.

The grant files have been maintained as created by the Markle Foundation. The names of individuals listed on the folders refer to the contact person within the organization; this person may change over the period of the grant.

The Markle Foundation awarded two types of communications grants, both of which are represented in this series. A prefix of "G" in front of a grant number connoted a program grant; a "D" signified a President's discretionary grant.

Markle Foundation Programs - Accession 2

Physical Description: 24 Cubic Feet

Arrangement note

This subgroup is arranged in two series:

Series 1 - Grants in Communications (1979-1984)

Series 2 - Grants in Communications (1984-1989)

Within each series, materials are arranged alphabetically. The beginning of each file includes the project proposal letter, Grantee File Checklist, authorization memorandum, award letter, budget, and summary sheets. The remaining material in the file is arranged chronologically.

Scope and Contents

During the years that the Markle Foundation program in mass communications and information technology has been in place, it has sponsored numerous projects that involve strengthening the performance of the media and understanding the potential of communications technology. This grant series, which contains correspondence, memoranda, reports, financial data, publicity materials, and printed matter, documents the Foundation's interest in all aspects of the media, as well as its efforts to support a wide range of projects designed to improve mass communications.

Grants have focused on the uses of the media to inform and to facilitate political participation; the developing role of interactive communications technology, including advances in multimedia and electronic publishing; and the development of telecommunications policies that serve the public interest. In addition, the Markle Foundation has supported projects that revitalize American radio; determine the effect television has on child development; study the impact of the media on politics; develop a feasible system of qualitative ratings for television; and examine how technology can be used to assist an aging population.

Specifically, the Foundation has funded a wide range of activities, including "Channels of Communication," a magazine that critically examines television and its relationship to society; the National News Council, which investigates and adjudicates complaints against the press; the New York World Television Festival; Telecommunications Policy Research conferences; and the Public Agenda Foundation, which organized a series of "citizen's choice campaigns" in which local media in various parts of the country agreed to cover a particular election topic in depth.

Many of the Foundation's projects have focused on ways to improve political coverage on television. The Foundation formed the Markle Commission on the Media and the Electorate, whose main tasks were to define the kinds, quality, and depth of information the media should present to the public.

Beginning in the early 1980s, the Markle Foundation took a serious look at radio as a medium which might redress some of what they considered to be the past failures of both commercial television and radio. The Foundation's commitment to improvement in radio programming was demonstrated by its support of TMC Multimedia Corporation (in the form of a Program-Related Investment, or PRI grant) in its effort to produce and to distribute educational and entertaining radio programming.

The Markle Foundation's interest in technology and an aging population was evident in its support of a number of RAND Corporation studies that examined how older people use technology, and how that technology affects their daily living. Beginning in the mid-1980s, the Foundation supported the work of Senior Net, a computer communications network designed to aid the elderly, developed at the University of San Francisco. Later in the decade, the Markle Foundation funded the development of the Community Barter Exchange program, a form of cable television-assisted exchange of services among elderly persons.

The grant files have been maintained as created by the Markle Foundation. They are divided chronologically into two series, although there is some overlap and both series contain a few files from outside their respective time frames. Within each series the files are arranged alphabetically. The names of individuals listed on the folders refer to the contact person withing the organization.

A prefix of "G" in front of a grant number connotes a program grant; a "D" signifies a grant from the president's discretionary fund. A PRI (Program-Related Investment) grant is made either in the form of loans, or the purchase of equity in business activities whose economic success would further the foundation's goals.

The Markle Foundation does not have an application form for submitting a proposal. An informal letter outlining the project is all that is required. This letter, along with the Grantee File Checklist, authorization memorandum, award letter, budget, and summary sheets are filed at the front of each grant file. The rest of the material in each file is in chronological order.

For additional information on grantees (including names of recipients and award purposes), see the Appropriations section of the "Annual Reports" of the Markle Foundation.

Markle Foundation Administration - Accession 2

Physical Description: 40.8 Cubic Feet

Arrangement note

This subgroup is arranged in three series:

Series 1 - President Lloyd N. Morrisett's Papers

Series 2 - General Office Files

Series 3 - Board of Directors

President Lloyd N. Morrisett's Papers, 1927-1992 1965-1992

Physical Description: 24 Cubic Feet 20 boxes

Arrangement note

This series is arranged in 5 subseries:

Subseries 1 - Alphabetical Files

Subseries 2 - Subject Files

Subseries 3 - Professional Activities

Subseries 4 - Chronological File

Subseries 5 - Personal Files

Scope and Contents note

Lloyd N. Morrisett, who joined the Markle Foundation as president in 1969, initiated the Foundation's program in communication and information technology following the termination of the Markle Scholar Program in academic medicine. Prior to accepting his position at Markle, Morrisett was vice president of the Carnegie Corporation of New York and of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. During his tenure with the Carnegie Corporation, he had been involved with public television projects and brought this interest and expertise to his new position. These papers document Morrisett's continuing interest, as president of the Markle Foundation, in public television and in the use of mass communication technology in education, science, and the political process.

Except where noted, Markle Foundation folder titles and system of arrangement within folders have been maintained.

Alphabetical Files, 1927-1987 1965-1987

Arrangement note

Original order has been preserved, and most of the material is filed in reverse chronological order.

Scope and Contents note

Together with Subseries 2, this subseries reflect Morrisett's service as an advisor or trustee on boards of corporations, foundations, and institutions of higher learning. Among the most notable are Children's Television Workshop, Oberlin College, RAND Corporation, Systems Development Corporation, Media Commentary Council, Haskins Laboratories, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Morrisett's role in the founding of the Children's Television Workshop (CTW), which produced "Sesame Street," "Electric Company," and other educational television programs, as well as his active participation in committees such as finance, investment, and nomination are documented. Chairman of CTW's Board of Directors since 1970, Morrisett's correspondence with Joan Ganz Cooney, Gerald Lesser, and David Brit, among others, delineates his active role in the direction and growth of the Workshop.

As an alumnus of Oberlin College, Morrisett served as a trustee for many years and was chairman of the board of trustees from 1975-1981. In 1973 and then again in 1982, he participated in presidential search committees; his papers from the 1973 presidential search reflect an active and vocal student involvement with the process. In addition to this work on nominations, his service as trustee included work in the areas of finance and investment, admissions, and long range planning.

Mr. Morrisett joined the board of the Systems Development Corporation in 1966 and was active during the time of the corporation's change in status from non-profit to profit. He became a board member as well of the Systems Development Foundation, which was created to carry on philanthropic efforts previously undertaken by the Systems Development Corporation. He remained a member of this board until the foundation's dissolution in 1988.

Mr. Morrisett was a member, as well, of the Media Commentary Council beginning with its incorporation, and was involved with the publication of "Channels" magazine from its inception until the magazine's sale in 1985.

The earlier material in this subseries, dated 1927 through 1957 (folder 101), includes articles pertaining to the field of philanthropy and are of a reference nature only.

Throughout the materials are reflections and ideas pertaining to mass communication, education, and the growth of technology.

Arrangement note

Original order has been preserved, and most of the material is filed in reverse chronological order.

Scope and Contents note

Together with Subseries 1, this subseries reflect Morrisett's service as an advisor or trustee on boards of corporations, foundations, and institutions of higher learning. Among the most notable are Children's Television Workshop, Oberlin College, RAND Corporation, Systems Development Corporation, Media Commentary Council, Haskins Laboratories, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Morrisett's role in the founding of the Children's Television Workshop (CTW), which produced "Sesame Street," "Electric Company," and other educational television programs, as well as his active participation in committees such as finance, investment, and nomination are documented. Chairman of CTW's Board of Directors since 1970, Morrisett's correspondence with Joan Ganz Cooney, Gerald Lesser, and David Brit, among others, delineates his active role in the direction and growth of the Workshop.

As an alumnus of Oberlin College, Morrisett served as a trustee for many years and was chairman of the board of trustees from 1975-1981. In 1973 and then again in 1982, he participated in presidential search committees; his papers from the 1973 presidential search reflect an active and vocal student involvement with the process. In addition to this work on nominations, his service as trustee included work in the areas of finance and investment, admissions, and long range planning.

Mr. Morrisett joined the board of the Systems Development Corporation in 1966 and was active during the time of the corporation's change in status from non-profit to profit. He became a board member as well of the Systems Development Foundation, which was created to carry on philanthropic efforts previously undertaken by the Systems Development Corporation. He remained a member of this board until the foundation's dissolution in 1988.

Mr. Morrisett was a member, as well, of the Media Commentary Council beginning with its incorporation, and was involved with the publication of "Channels" magazine from its inception until the magazine's sale in 1985.

The Subject Files subseries includes correspondence, memoranda, records of interviews, minutes of meetings, financial data of organizations and projects, grant proposals, studies, administrative miscellany, photographs, publicity materials, and printed materials.

Throughout the materials are reflections and ideas pertaining to mass communication, education, and the growth of technology.
