Biographical / Historical

John A. Pino earned a BS in Agriculture in 1947 and PhD in Zoology in 1951 from Rutgers University. He was an associate professor and conducted research in the Department of Poultry Science at Rutgers until 1955 when he accepted an animal scientist position with the Rockefeller Foundation's Mexican Agricultural Program. In 1960, Pino became director of the program and later transferred to the Foundation's headquarters in New York to become director of the Agricultural Science Program in 1970. He retired from the Rockefeller Foundation in 1983 to serve as Agricultural Science Advisor to the Inter-American Development Bank until 1986. Dr. Pino served as a member of the National Research Council's Board on Agriculture from 1973-1977 and again beginning in 1983. He became a senior fellow of the National Research Council in 1986. Pino also served as Executive Director of CILCA, the International Liaison Committee for Food Corps Programs, which provided low-cost assistance to rural populations in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Beginning in 1990, Pino served as a consultant to agricultural research organizations. A leader in the Green Revolution, Pino helped lead efforts to establish the world network of International Agricultural Research Centers to improve basic food production.
