Biographical / Historical

The American International Association for Economic and Social Development (AIA) (1946-1968), was established by Nelson A. Rockefeller in July 1946 as a privately financed non-profit philanthropic organization which aimed to promote "self-development and better standards of living, together with understanding and cooperation" in Latin America. The AIA worked closely with local governments and other established organizations to develop programs which could eventually be supported and managed locally. Primarily, the AIA's activities focused on rural rehabilitation and agricultural development, with concentrated efforts on cooperative programs with the governments of Brazil and Venezuela. The AIA was also active in agricultural research and nutritional education as well as improving local roads, communications, and primary education.

AIA programs included the Association of Credit and Rural Assistance (ACAR), Inter-American Council on Nutrition Education (CIDEA), Council of Rural Development (CBR), and Inter-American Popular Information Program (PIIP).

Scope and Contents

The collection contains correspondence, memoranda, quarterly reports, and publications of the AIA and its various programs, as well as administrative materials.

^ Return to Table of Contents

Arrangement note

The AIA collection is arranged into four series: Series 1: General (folders 1-131), arranged alphabetically; Series 2: Quarterly Reports (folders 132-310), arranged chronologically; Series 4: Publications and Miscellaneous (folders 311-534), arranged using Appendix III of "The AIA Story" by Martha Dalrymple, and Series 1027: Photographs. The material has predominately been further grouped alphabetically by program title. The AIA Photographs has been further arranged into six subseries (See Series 1027 in FA438 for further details).
