Biographical/Historical note

John P. Hervey was a professional electrical engineer who became the Senior Electrical Engineer at the Rockefeller Institute's Jacques Loeb Laboratory in Woods Hole, Massachusetts. He began his career as an assistant professor of biophysics at Cornell Medical College and then became an associate professor at Johns Hopkins University.

Detlev Bronk, president of the RI, hired Hervey in order to strengthen the Electronics Laboratory to better serve the needs of neurophysiologists. Hervey worked in Woods Hole on long-term projects while his assistants, C. Yang and then Robert Schoenfeld (1956), ran the laboratory in New York.

Hervey died on May 19, 1982.
