Biographical / Historical

In 1970, the Ford Foundation initiated an International Urbanization Survey designed to review and assess the effects of urbanization in the developing world. The Survey staff travelled to countries where the Foundation maintained field offices to observe urbanization issues for themselves. In addition, the Survey drew upon the experiences of Foundation personnel assigned to field offices in developing countries. The Survey was based in Athens, Greece and conducted by John P. Robin, Colin Rosser, and Frederick C. Terzo. The Survey covered select countries in Asia, Africa, and Latin America and consisted of three basic questions:

1. How are the developing countries themselves responding to rapid urbanization and its consequences?
2. What are international aid agencies doing to advise and assist them?
3. What would be the most useful and effective contribution of the Ford Foundation's international program in the field?

At the conclusion of the Survey, Foundation staff's field notes on phases of urbanization in specific countries were expanded into working papers (see related materials). Additional working papers were provided by Foundation personnel with a depth of field knowledge, and by consultants' expertise either in specific countries or in topics of special interest. The working papers resulting from the International Urbanization Study were originally created by Ford Foundation staff to guide the Foundation in making informed judgments on future programs related to urban conditions in developing countries, but they were ultimately shared widely in the development field. The work of the Survey was completed with the publishing of a final report in 1972.

Scope and Contents

The collection primarily contains correspondence related to the logistics and findings of the Ford Foundation's International Urbanization Survey. The Survey was conducted between 1970-1972 to review and assess the effects of urbanization in the developing world. The Foundation used their findings to plan international programming related to urbanization and publish working papers based on their observations.

Standard processing by Katie Martin, September 2019.

Conditions Governing Use

RAC users must abide by all applicable provisions of United States copyright law. Reproduction/duplication of archival items is routinely provided in accordance with "fair use". If the RAC does not hold copyright for an archival collection, or items within a collection, it is the users responsibility to contact the copyright holder, or make a fair effort to do so, prior to publication.

Immediate Source of Acquisition

Ford Foundation archive was deposited at the RAC in 2011. Ford Foundation records, correspondence, reports, program files, and officers' papers were transferred to and accessioned by the RAC beginning in 2011. Accessions continue as necessary. This material was transferred to the RAC in 2019 and was ingested by the RAC as part of Program Strategy records, Accession 2019:012.

Conditions Governing Access

Open for research. Brittle or damaged items are available at the discretion of RAC.
