Biographical / Historical

In the 1960s and 1970s, the Ford Foundation was involved in strengthening the finances and curricula of black colleges and universities through various programs. In 1973, the Foundation committed $50 million to a program that provided grants to eight private, historically black colleges and universities. In 1968, the Ford Foundation provided grants totaling $3.5 million for curriculum development and improvement of business practices at predominately black colleges and universities. Between 1972 and 1978, the Foundation committed another $50 million to provide scholarships to select minority students and faculty to continue their education. Between 1959 and 1965, the Ford Foundation allocated $32.8 million in grants to fifty-one college universities, and departments of education to help improve teacher education and attract better students to teaching careers.
